

What brand of optical module is RoHS

AI Overview

ETU-LINK, PowerPhotonic, FiberOpticom, and Renishaw are among the optical module brands certified as RoHS compliant. ETU-LINK optical modules have passed RoHS certification along with CE, FCC, and ISO9001, ensuring that their products restrict hazardous substances and meet environmental standards for global markets. Their modules are widely used in data centers and 5G base stations, providing both technical reliability and regulatory compliance. PowerPhotonic Ltd. certifies that all its optical components comply with RoHS II (EC Directive 2011/65/EC). Their products, including UV-fused silica optics and optical coatings, contain less than the permitted levels of hazardous substances such as cadmium, mercury, lead, hexavalent chromium, PBBs, and PBDEs. Certificates of conformance are available upon request. FiberOpticom offers RoHS-compliant SFP optical transceivers, including 20KM SFP+ modules for single-mode fiber communications. These modules are designed for high-speed data transmission (up to 10.3 Gbps) and meet environmental standards while providing hot-swappable connectivity for networking equipment. Renishaw's optical encoder systems and associated parts are RoHS compliant under Directive 2011/65/EU and its amendments. They provide CE certificates and compliance documentation for their products, ensuring adherence to hazardous substance restrictions in optical components. Summary If you are seeking RoHS-compliant optical modules, the following brands are reliable options: ETU-LINK – certified for global market compliance PowerPhotonic – optics and coatings with strict hazardous substance limits FiberOpticom – SFP and SFP+ transceivers for fiber networks Renishaw – optical encoders and related components These brands ensure that their optical modules meet environmental regulations, making them suitable for applications requiring green and safe electronic components.
